What is the Office of the Federal Defender?

The Office of the Federal Defender represents defendants charged in federal court with felonies and misdemeanors, before and after arrest, trial, sentencing, and on appeal. We also represent inmates in appellate and both capital and non-capital habeas corpus proceedings.

Social Work Internship Program

The Federal Defender's Office (FDO) employs social workers in both the Sacramento and Fresno offices to counsel and aid clients through various challenges that exist in conjunction with their criminal case. The FDO's Social Work Program is an important component of a holistic approach to meeting client needs. We believe that by helping clients address their social support needs, we enable the best possible resolution to their criminal case AND reduce recidivism risks.

"I am passionate and grateful for the work I do through this internship. My favorite part is helping clients see their value and strengths, regardless of their past."

We cooperate with the Federal Court, the Federal PreTrial Services Office, and the Federal Probation Office to address client needs. FDO social workers assist clients with housing, healthcare, difficult family situations, mental health counseling and treatment, substance use addiction treatment, employment and vocational training, mentoring, immigration concerns, and other barriers that our clients face.

Your Role

The Federal Defender's Office seeks students who have a desire to work alongside our social work team. Student interns will advocate for and work with FDO clients to meet their particular needs.

In addition to direct client work, interns will work with the social work team to develop ongoing programs, such as:

- Reentry Collaborative
- Resource and Employment Fairs
- Mentoring Programs
- Housing Partnerships
- Employment Partnerships
- Community Agency/Provider Outreach

Social work interns develop unique hands-on experience while contributing to the lives of our clients in a positive way.
